I also want to change the links. I'm trying to get a lot of links from certain web pages. I used a perl script that changes them to a different format. I save that file in the downloads folder and now I want to set that as the default. I don't know what to do. I thought about creating a new admin user so that I could open the folder and change them. I do not want to create a new admin user since the program that I'm using to change the links does not have an admin user. Any ideas? A: I would suggest using a shell script for this. This way, if you make changes to the program, all you'll have to do is make sure that the script points to the correct place for a new version. The new London mayor is calling on a panel of expert advisers to advise him on how to crack down on public drinking at the Olympics. Sadiq Khan's office said: "The mayor is currently consulting with experts to look at the opportunities to tackle drinking alcohol in the Olympic Park, including: restrictions on advertising, licensing and promotions, where to set consumption limits, restrictions on large-scale drinking and the possible use of alcohol testing." The mayor, who was elected on a clear pledge to clamp down on drunks, would not say whether he planned to introduce a "nanny state" approach to the London Olympics. However, the mayor's non-league football team, Palace FC, sponsors supermarket chain Sainsbury's, which has a cafe on the Oval, the sports venue in south-west London. It was not immediately clear whether that is linked to the mayor's plans. However, a spokesman for the retailer said: "We have been sponsoring Palace since 2010, but this is purely in support of the club's charitable work. Our sponsorship deal has no bearing on the mayor's proposed policies on drink in London or anywhere else." Last week, Boris Johnson called for greater safety and a clampdown on public drinking at the Olympics, ahead of his first meeting with the International Olympic Committee (IOC) president, Thomas Bach. He also said there would be more police on the streets during the Games. The mayor has previously spoken of his outrage at the effect alcohol can have on young spectators, with drinking at sports venues a particular concern given organised drinking at football matches
